TODAY'S MISSION RESULT:

Learned when to rage quit.

Are... are you serious? Are you sure you're Darius?

Both of these religions originated in the middle-east and are considered Abrahamic religions, which mean they trace back their lineage to a common father figure named Abraham.

Comparing this to Hinduism and Buddhism, which are religions originating in the Indian subcontinent. both also have different branches with different teachings but are fundamentally different to Abrahamic religions.

Hinduism contains many mythologies, and stories and is both a religion and a way of life for the Hindu people. The concept of God is a lot less rigid in Hinduism, depending on the individual's personal philosophy, belief in God can range from belief in a single god, multiple gods or even no gods at all.

Despite their differences however, all Abrahamic religions are monotheistic, this means they agree that one, all powerful God created the world among other things.

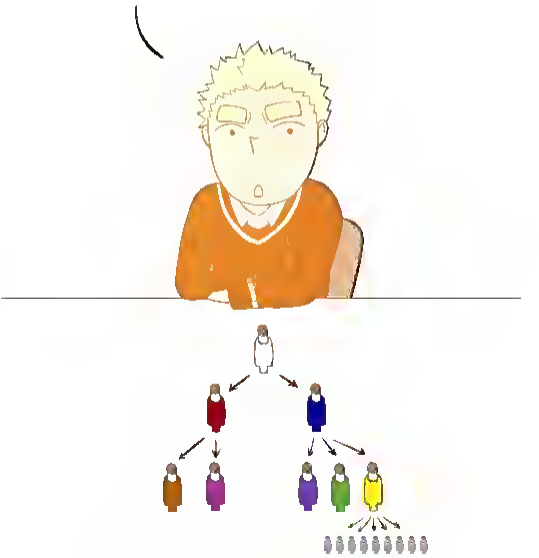
And the 4 largest religions which about every ¾ of all people believe in are Christianity, Islam, Hinduism and Buddhism

: an organized system of beliefs, ceremonies, and rules used to worship a god or a group of gods

: an interest, a belief, or an activity that is very important to a person or group

According to Wikipedia more than 80% of all people consider themselves religious.

Through the course of history both religions have divided into different groups of believers such as Catholic, Orthodox and Protestant for the Christians and Sunni and Shia for the Muslims. These groups have some different practices and beliefs from one another while also sharing some things in common.



Now that I've done all this research which one of these is am I supposed to be?

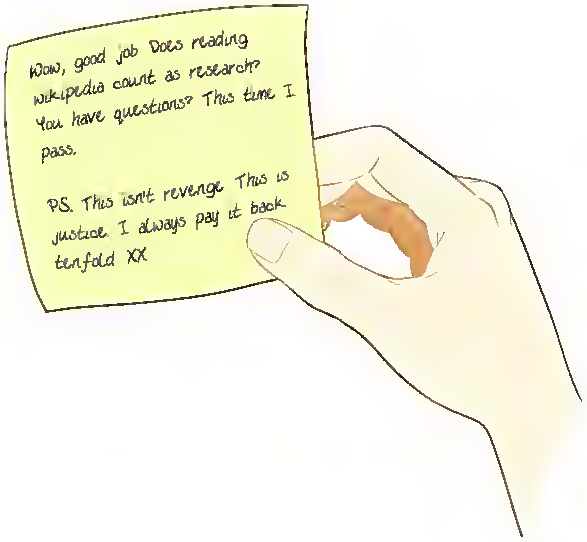
Buddhism on the other hand is a non-theistic religion. Theism being the belief in the existence of a god or gods. Therefore there is no belief in any specific deity or God.

What are you doing Dar?

What's the big deal? I study.



Wow, good job Does reading wikipedia count as research? You have questions? This time I pass.

Hello, do you know how long this took?

You know.
Research.

Not just that but on average out of every 2 people you meet, there's a good chance one of them is either Muslim or Christian.
